THE GREATEST ACTION-HEROES OF ALL TIME -- ON SALE NOW!

THE HUMAN FISH

There are people who still believe in the mythical lost kingdom of Atlantis. Somewhere it is submerged and the aim is to find it. Now there are only two possible ways in which any kingdom can land at the floor of the acean. Either there was a terrible flood or some other kind of upheaval. Or it was built there and peopled by creatures that can breathe and live under water. The second possibility is the one that fires the imagination. And science fiction writers have not been slow in using it as a plot.

However let us keep this within the realm of science regility. If we do have creatures in such a kingdom, how are they going to breathe and live? Again you have only two possibilities. One is that these creatures are going to have gills like a fish. So we think of a beautiful Mermaid, Her upper half is that of a human being and her lower half is that of a fish. We have to give her gills if she is going to swim beneath the surface of the water. We must bear in mind that we do have a lung fish which breathes air and obtains oxygen that way. So our Mermaid could have lungs but that would limit her underwater activity.

But now we turn to another possibility. Our human being must normally carry the oxygen supply with him. This can be done in a variety of ways. Like the scuba expert, he can have the tanks on his back. Or like the deep sea diver he can have his air supplies from above. Or he may be enclosed either in a submarine or caisson and breathe the air supplied to the structure in which he remains.

But now there is another possibility. For recently a hamster was placed in a submerged tank and kept alive by the use of an artificial gill. This was actually a membrane of silicone rubber. This membrane was stretched across the top, bottom, and sides of the tank. It extracted the exygen from the water and at the same time kept the water from entering the tank.

So it actually acted like the gills of a fish in that it permitted the entry of oxygen into the enclosure and allowed the escape into the water of carbon dioxide exhaled by the animal. This immediately opens up new vistas for those people who would like to look for the lost Kingdom of Atlantis. And also, if they found it and liked the place, they could remain there.

Our underseas explorer is put into a special suit of this material. We do have the problem of increasing pressure as we go down beneath the surface of the water. Once this is solved, the rest is easy. For our adventurous soul dons this suit. He need not warry how long he remains below on the bottom of the ocean floor. Provided, of course, he has sufficient food and water for his needs. But since we can't make this membrane suit very large and we can use concentrated foods, the difficulty is one that can be overcome. How about the water supply? Either a small still to change talt water into fresh water or a chemical container which will separate the salt from the salt water.

But we still have one very important problem left. And that is how to protect our here within the membrane suit from an assault by some unfriendly deep water fish or the unknown creatures of the world on the bottom of the ocean. You can readily picture a sword fish saying to himself: "That creature doesn't belong here. Better go fahim at once. No declaration of war needed." And the oncoming deadly fish rips open the membrane suit.

We will again have two possibilities. One is to figure how to make that membrani as tough as battleship armor. Or how to surround it with a protective device-like an electrical shock barrier. This I leave to the experts. Or perhaps even the amateurs may come up with a new idea.

Since our hera-will corry with him either an undersea comera or a portable TV camera we can check on every detail of his adventure. Watch him discover the entrance to Atlantis. Watch his first meeting with King Neptune. And breathlessly watch him battle a gigantic variety of the Devil Fish. We are at present concentrating our energies on the exploration of outer space. We might as well spend some of those billions and explore the bottom of our oceans and seas now that we have solved the oxygen problem
